

Sinclair's proposal to broadcast what amounts to partisan political commentary is a blatant misuse of the public airways. These were given to the media to serve the purposes of democracy, which is to present information useful to the public in our deliberations on political issues. The media should not use what belongs to the public, given to them freely, for partisan political purposes.

Up to this point the public media have been relatively free of such attempts. They must continue to be so and so Sinclair must not be allowed to set a precedent for future misuse of public property.
